I. RATIONALE

The number of children and youth now comprise a significant proportion of school aged children. Among them are children and youth who are either born with or have acquired physical, sensory, or mental impairments.

The latest Philippine census reveals that of the 75 million population, 50 percent are of school-age or 37.5 million are between ages 0 to 20 years. In any given population, the universal estimate of children with special needs is 12 percent. Two percent of these (750,000) are gifted while 10 percent (3,750,000) are children and youth with disabilities.

The enrollment data of children with special needs (SY 2002-2003, Elementary and Secondary) showed that only a little more than 66,635 or 1.02 percent of children and youth with special needs are enrolled in elementary and secondary schools. Thirty-five, nine hundred ninety-three (35,993) of these are being served.

This indicates that the vast majority of children and youth with disabilities have very little opportunity of being included in the schemes and programs that provide early education. They cannot get even the most basic education because there not enough teachers, especially in the rural areas, who have the appropriate knowledge, skills, and attitude (KAS) to handle students with disabilities.

Undoubtedly, this emerging concern should take the front seat and should be contained in order to protect and promote the right to education of Filipino children and youth with disabilities. This implies an obligation by the State, family and communities to protect and promote their rights as advocated in the United Nations Convention of the Rights of Children (UN-CRC).
To address this concern, the Department of Social Welfare and Development, through the Social Technology Bureau has conducted a two-year pilot project (1999-2000) entitled “Tuloy Aral Walang Sagabal (TAWAG) Project” which aims for the mainstreaming of 3-6 years old children and 6-18 years old youth with disabilities in the regular day care service program, and referral (of those children of school age and youth) in regular or special school and community.

The problem seen, however, is how to sustain the implementation of TAWAG; hence, the development of the Community-Based Social Laboratory for Children and Youth with Disabilities emerges. As such, this facility is expected to build the capacities of parents, caregivers, day care workers, volunteers, and other intermediaries in the mainstreaming of children and youth with disabilities.

II. LEGAL BASE

Mainstreaming ultimately aims at the integration of the children and youth with disabilities into the regular school system and eventually in the community. Crucial to this are the legislations, executive orders, and other official issuances from the national government.

The Constitutional provision which mandates that every Filipino be provided access to quality education is the primary basis for special laws and other landmark legislations passed which include:

- Republic Act 5250, enacted in 1968 and which established the 10-year Training Program for Teachers of Special and Exceptional Children in the Philippines.
- P.D. 603 “Child and Youth Welfare Code” issued in 1977, a comprehensive law which included many provisions on the rights, needs and rehabilitation of the disabled and special categories of children.
- Presidential Decree No. 1509, issued in 1874, which created the National Commission Concerning Disabled Persons, now known as the National Council for the Welfare of Disabled Persons (NCWDP). The Council which remains the coordinating body of all public and private efforts in the rehabilitation of the disabled is under the Department of Social Welfare and Development.
Batas Pambansa Blg. 232, “The Education Act of 1982,” which recognizes the state’s responsibility to provide special education services within the formal school system.

Batas Pambansa Blg. 344 passed in 1982, known as the “Accessibility Law, An act to enhance the mobility of disabled persons by requiring certain buildings, institutions, establishments, and public utilities to install facilities and other devices.

Republic Act No. 7277, passed in 1992, otherwise known as the Magna Carta for Disabled Persons, an Act providing for the rehabilitation, self-development and self-reliance of disabled persons and their integration into the mainstream of society.

The United Nations proclaimed 1983-1992 as the “United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons” which infused life into the country’s efforts to serve its disabled. Concrete objectives were set out in the World Programme of Action concerning disabled persons which was adopted by the United Nations General Assembly in December 1982.

Proclamation No. 240 of August 2002 signed by President Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo declaring the period from the year 2003 to the year 2012 as the Philippine Decade of Persons with Disabilities.

III. PROJECT DESCRIPTION

In 1994 to 1998 project Social Mobilization for Persons with Disabilities, Senior Citizens and their Families, SOCMOB was conceptualized and implemented in all 16 regions of the country. The five (5) years pilot project demonstrated strategies on its three components, such as:

EDPID - Early Detection, Prevention, Intervention of Disabilities among 0-6 years old children.

SHG - Self-Help Groups of Persons with Disabilities.

SCVR - Senior Citizens as Volunteer Resource.
When the SOCMOB project was evaluated in 1999, it was found being implemented by the LGUs in 134 municipalities covering 1,116 barangays. The implementation of EDPIID was observed to be strong on medical intervention but integration in the day service program and the regular school was lacking because of the limited knowledge and skills of teachers-workers in handling children with disabilities.

The problem seen in integration of these children in day care is the lack of skills of day care workers. Similarly, in school, the lack of skilled teachers who knew how to handle children with difficulties in learning, moving, seeing or hearing, impedes the full realization of education for all (EFA). A sequel of SOCMOB, the TAWAG project was developed and implemented to provide the needed capability building of the day care workers, parents, volunteers and other intermediaries.

The Community-Based Social Laboratory for the Mainstreaming of Children and Youth with Disabilities will sustain the TAWAG project. It is a viable facility managed by the city/municipal social welfare development office in the community to serve as the immersion, hands-on training venue for parents/caregivers of children and youth with disabilities, community volunteers, day care workers and other intermediaries/stakeholders for the integration/mainstreaming of children and youth with disabilities into the day care service program, regular school and into the community.

It is a community-based training facility, which aims to build the capacities/capabilities of families of children and youth with disability in their proper care and management and foster the optimal development of the child/youth with disability for his/her mainstreaming. The Roving Day Care Worker (RDCW) trained on early intervention, childhood care and development serves as the trainer to demonstrate to the parents/caregivers, day care workers, volunteers, etc., the proper care and management of 3-6 years old children with disability. It involves the presence and active participation of parents and siblings of the child/youth with disability in continuing the activities at the home-based setting. Hence, this Social Laboratory (SOCLAB) shall serve as the vehicle to equip the parents and siblings of the child/youth with disability the knowledge, attitude, and skills in managing home-based intervention. Likewise, it encourages them to seek intervention early and tailor services that are appropriate to the needs of their child/youth with disability.

The SOCLAB is the TAWAG RESOURCES CENTER itself where close interactions and relationships among the roving day care workers are built towards the main goal of mainstreaming the child and youth with disability.
